American Drawings and Watercolors

Carter Foster: What's interesting about the painting is how Hopper both stretched out the building and condensed it the same time. Art Spiegelman: Hopper's a regionalist and I've always liked the American regionalists like Reginald Marsh and Grant Wood. The stores not activated and therefore full of a kind of sad potential.

American Drawings and Watercolors: Highlights from the Collection, 1710

Through Charles Mente, a friend from the Harper art department, Abbey applied to the studio of history painter Wilhelm von Diez, a professor at the Royal Academy. On view will be examples of portraiture by academic and folk artists, figure drawing, historical and literary narrative, landscape — including several early views of New York City — and scientific illustration.
