Currently, an individual or a family member seeking treatment for an addictive disorder is not likely to be offered a treatment drawn from the extensive list of well-studied and empirical evidence-based practices provided previously. Throughout the conference sessions, the Brandeis-Harvard mentoring program provided opportunities for attendees to be mentored or to mentor other individuals involved in the Addiction Health Services Research field. Nonetheless, this model articulated a standard by which interventions could be measured, and the evidence each has accumulated could be compared.
