Hobson père et fils left a unique working library and an important archive of notes and scholarly correspondence, but in Anthony's case it is easy to forget that he was also an active and imaginative collector. He graduated in both philosophy and medicine at the Roman University and joined several erudite academies. Hobson ignored no historical aspect of binding decoration and his most original — in fact, path-breaking — approach was to integrate the painstaking study and identification of binders and ateliers with the wider study of artistic patronage and humanistic interest, particularly during the Renaissance.
