Churches and Wool: A Study of the Wool Trade in 15th Century England

In 1925 silk, rayon, and wool weaving was started at Warminster by a Macclesfield firm which still continues the industry there, employing about 90 people. By contrast the 6 makers at Downton are all described as weavers, which suggests that they worked for Salisbury drapers; but it is probably unsafe to draw such a conclusion. Two closed in Bradford at the end of the century and the remaining one in 1906.

A letter on the corn laws : and on the means of obviating the mischiefs and distress, which are rapidly increasing List of economic books and tracts, acts of Parliament, broadsides, and proclamations from the library of the Earl of Sheffield. Sheep farming is more common in the northwestern provinces of the country, where such tracts of land exist. Cloth 1550—1640 The trading conditions for the cloth industry grew less favourable during the second half of the 16th century.

The Rise and Fall of a Tudor Wool Factory

Apart from its use by Flemish refugees in 1567, the only evidence of cloth being made from it in England in the 16th century lies in the claim of Benedict Webb of Kingswood then a detached portion of Wiltshire to have been the first to make Spanish cloth when he was living at Taunton in the mid-eighties. Wool money largely financed Spanish rulers and thus the voyages to the New World by.

Medieval Life

The repeated difficulties in the export trade which are described below did not make for the accumulation of large fortunes, and the small producers, if they possessed enough land to keep them, had some advantage in bad times. The Gloucestershire magistrates issued wage rates, the Somerset bench decided that it was impossible to do so, and the Wiltshire justices took no notice at all.

The practice of sending children away to act as servants was more common in towns than in the countryside. New textile types appeared around the tenth century, prominently including diamond twills whose use continued into the thirteenth century. He concluded from particular observations into a universal law, and then back again—from universal laws to prediction of particulars.
