2022 Formula One racing car, with nifty design improvements, revealed

Before the design process begins, one needs to have full knowledge of the resources available, and on the limitations imposed by these resources. The goal is to recognize the features of the previous car that the engineers should try to keep for the new design and the ones they should try to eliminate.

One good example is the 2-week shutdown that occurs in Formula 1, due to an agreement done by Formula One Teams Association FOTA intended to reduce the costs of running a competitive team. These steps will normally happen in a non-sequential manner, with some restrictions arising in later steps demanding changes in previous stages. Through our strategy of Pervasive Engineering Simulation, we help the world's most innovative companies deliver radically better products to their customers.
