Treatments for Bipolar Disorder in Children

Compared to adolescents with a history of major depressive disorder and to a never-mentally-ill group, both the teens with bipolar disorder and those with subclinical symptoms had greater functional impairment and higher rates of co-occurring illnesses especially anxiety and disruptive behavior disorders, suicide attempts, and mental health services utilization. Among children with rages, 82% had an ADHD diagnosis at discharge compared with 9% with a bipolar diagnosis at discharge. Epidemiology Theoretically, while a child with bipolar disorder in New Jersey should still be classified as having bipolar disorder in New Zealand, based on the similarities in diagnostic criteria, the estimated prevalence rate of bipolar disorder varies.

Treating bipolar disorder in kids and teens

A multisite study funded by the NIMH is underway to investigate the effectiveness of prophylactic medication therapy in adolescents with bipolar disorder.
