Hurricane Rita formed over The Bahamas and after passing westward to Florida, it entered an enviroment of warm waters wind speed:180 MPH. Heavy rains before and during the hurricane produced river flooding, most notably along the Connecticut River.

Gulf Stream

Stommel 1957 hypothesized a deep southward current along this boundary, and Swallow and Worthington 1961 observed a southward flow at depths near 2,800 m off Charleston, South Carolina. It dissipated on October 5, 1995. The American Petroleum Institute 2012 provides an argument for the efficacy of subsurface dispersants.

The use of chemical dispersants was controversial from a public point of view because of concerns about dispersant toxicity, the potential for dispersants to make oil more bioavailable thus making dispersed oil more toxic than nondispersed oil , and the persistence of dispersants, dispersed oil, or dispersant byproducts.

List of United States hurricanes

Alberto is an example of a storm to enter the Gulf of Mexico and dissipating while never making landfall, which is an unusual event.
