Johannesburg; The Elusive Metropolis

In this volume, we hear--over the droning clichés that still circulate about the African city's ruin and decadence--another note, another cadence. Breckenridge, Lindsay Bremner, David Bunn, Fred de Vries, Nsizwa Dlamini, Mark Gevisser, Stefan Helgesson, Julia Hornberger, Jonathan Hyslop, Grace Khunou, Frédéric Le Marcis, Xavier Livermon, John Matshikiza, Achille Mbembe, Robert Muponde, Sarah Nuttall, Tom Odhiambo, Achal Prabhala, AbdouMalik Simone. This infrastructure is capable of facilitating the intersection of socialities so that expanded spaces of economic and cultural operation become available.

The essays challenge dominant models of urbanism and demonstrate with force and subtlety how African cities in general and Johannesburg in particular outpace urban theory. In contrast to Braudel, Hannah Arendt 1966 invokes the notion of the superfluous to refer to situations of misery and destitution.

Others simply wanted to escape lives made wretched by misery and debasement. In fact, if anything, there was never enough labor power at the beginning of the industrial revolution in South Africa. Yet another is to be found in the ways that luxury, pleasure, consumption, and other stimuli are said to affect the sensory foundations of mental life and the central role they play in the process of subject formation in general.

Johannesburg The Elusive Metropolis

This event took place in Kliptown, on the outskirts of Soweto, at a site that came to be called Freedom Square in honor of the occasion. Here, superfluity was not a matter simply of numbers or of surplus populations. The buildings - old and new, crumbling and solid - are just part of its landscape.

Johannesburg (October 2004 edition)

The mimetic structure of Johannesburg is still evident in the city's contemporary architectural forms or, more simply, in its mania for wealth, for the sensational and the ephemeral, for appearances.

Finally, through interviews and commentaries, journalists, artists, and architects of Johannesburg offer reflections on the geography and shifting culture of the city and its townships, on the complicated relationship between Johannesburg and other African cities, and on the search for an architectural style that adequately expresses the complexity of this cosmopolitan city.
