But what is their relationship to other churches in their city, to other churches in the United States, and to other Christians throughout the world? There is a buried sense of fear, ranging from performance anxiety to a broader social fear of the threatening other. A revelation presented by in 1984 decreed the construction of the and , after long-standing calls for both. Certainly the Anglo-Catholic model could not tolerate an ecclesiology of racially-separate churches, though it could tolerate them at the congregational level for pragmatic reasons, not all of them honourable one of the pragmatic reasons, for example, was white racism, but this was regarded by Anglo-Catholic missionaries as something to be overcome eventually, rather than made an aim or ideal, as in an ethnic church.

Among those consequences was the way their converts seized both the ideology and institutions of Christianity and used them to undermine white racial dominance in both church and state. My two cents here is that within the US, by far the largest is 2, the genuine methodist middle. Tawney's was undoubtedly the most forceful and authentic voice of Christian socialist prophecy to be raised during the 1920s and 30s, echoing into the 1950s.
