Echoing policies of the British leaders, who believed in the miasmatic theory that foul-smelling places caused disease, Colborne voiced concerns that the proposed temporary hospital was located in a highly unsanitary section of York. With the influx of Irish Catholics, Bishop Macdonell sought a suitable priest for this congregation. His appointment in this inauspicious penal unit in Sierra Leone may indicate that he was indeed an unpromising or penniless officer, but in any case his service was short-lived.
