They argued about the core concepts of semiotics, which helped to crystallise these concepts and supplement them with key content, reinforcing the theoretical cornerstones of semiotics. Permanent enophthalmos occurred in two children with Le Fort fractures. Five patients required primary bone grafting and three patients required secondary bone grafting.

Forty-eight formalin-fixed, human proximal radii were divided into 6 groups according to their bone density measured by dual-energy x-ray absorptiometry.

The meta-analysis providing the best available evidence was identified using the Jadad decision algorithm. The length IP over which each plate could trace the rib surface was evaluated on 109 cadaveric ribs.

Final postoperative evaluations 6 and 12 months will be performed by independent blinded evaluators. In 2018, Chinese semiotic studies made a great leap forward. This study aimed to evaluate the clinical outcomes of 20 surgically treated patients with displaced glenoid fractures after stabilization with distal radius plate.

The malunion rate and nonunion rate showed no significant difference between groups A and B 0 versus 13. The present study assessed injury patterns computationally by developing three-dimensional 3D finite element FE models that were validated experimentally. For each rib level 3-9, the plate design with the highest IP value was extracted to determine a best-fit plating configuration.

Differences in function scores, fracture union rate, overall pulmonary complication rate, and in-hospital mortality between the two groups were not significant.
