My Literary Passions by William Dean Howells:

. I don't know that other people get so worked up about finding new old authors to read, but it's something that's quite meaningful to me so it's a big deal. It stood in the midst of a garden bright with summer flowers, which at this hour lifted their silver heads all splendid with dew and sunshine; and it looked down the valley to the village, which stood at a little distance, intersected and embowered with orchards, and crowned with the spire of the church.

Divers and Sundry: Paul Ferroll: A Tale

As he got on horseback, he met a labourer belonging to the gardens coming to his work, and inquired what he was going to do.
