Family Law: Solemnisation of Marriage in England and Wales

This report helps the judge assess the couple's readiness for marriage. Section 3 of the General Scheme proposes that the new legislation will apply to any statutory provision, no matter when enacted or made, but that it will not apply to a deed, will or other instrument not being a statutory provision made before the commencement date.

Marriages in England and Wales

The ceremony in this case was clearly a ceremony of marriage. If option g were adopted, it would mean that any person wishing to marry who had attained the age of 16 and who had still not attained the age of majority would require parental consent and the consent of the court or other appropriate authority, and would be required to participate in premarriage counselling before permission to marry could be given by the court.

The Immigration and Social Security Co

Now that the minimum age for making settlements is to be eighteen or the age of marriage, the 1855 Act, the 1860 Act and the provision in the 1957 Act are no longer necessary and should be repealed. I am satisfied, as referred to above, that the parties considered themselves to be married demonstrated, for example, by the fact that in his will dated 15th March 1997 the Petitioner refers to the Respondent as his wife.
