The unique attributes of technology-based assessments that enable these activities include the following. Were data sources well chosen and in sufficient number? To whom are reports distributed? Other resources These may include the cost of travel, training, supplies, equipment, and services e.

Case Study

Recommendations Revise practices, policies, and regulations to ensure privacy and information protection while enabling a model of assessment that includes ongoing gathering and sharing of data for continuous improvement of learning and teaching. When they have access to their data, students can play a larger role in choosing their own learning pathways. Preventability can be defined at several levels--from preventing the occurrence of disease primary prevention ; through early detection and intervention with the aim of reversing, halting, or at least retarding the progress of a condition secondary prevention ; to minimizing the effects of disease and disability among those already ill tertiary prevention.

Case Study

International Journal of Public Sector Management. Recognising the importance of full access and co-operative working for generating rich data, the research team decided not to pursue work at that site and instead to focus on other recruited sites.
