Health survey for England, 2012

It was the fourth of a series of surveys aimed at monitoring health in Scotland the previous surveys were conducted in 1995, 1998 and 2003. In turn, these could directly or indirectly affect health outcomes, including those explored in this report self-assessed health, long-term conditions, psychosocial health and cardiovascular disease.

Health Survey for England (HSE)

Several studies have shown that C-reactive protein, fibrinogen, and HDL-C all serve as good markers for future cardiovascular events.

Health Survey for England

Firstly, measures such as general health, long-term conditions and smoking prevalence were comparable across survey types and therefore the mode of data collection did not appear to bias the results. In addition, respondents had examinations during which their blood pressure was taken. In contrast, Wales uses a different data collection method and its questionnaire content is more distinct.
