Taoist Evening Scripture

The vignettes especially helped in this regard, providing a venue for participants to express their opinions about social relationships and work activities without having to discuss the particulars of their own situation or that of anyone else they knew.

The Chinese Women's Federation was commissioned to support investigations of unequal treatment, including female infanticide, the selling or kidnapping of rural women, and employment practices that discriminated against women workers. This is particularly evident in a time of rapid social and economic change, such as the period examined in this volume.

On the other hand, if one is concerned with the extent to which women have activities outside the home and whether domestic tasks take place in the same location as work for pay or profit, then this distinction could be important.

Nǚ zhi shu — Calisphere

Residents who work outside the village go to factories run by other villages or towns.

炎之花 (Yán zhī Huā)

Participants represented a variety of disciplinary perspectives: anthropology, demography, economics, history, and sociology.

It is difficult to know what to make of this. For another, rural China did not remain agricultural. Recently the traditional gender division of labor has been the subject of attention, as scholars speculate that norms confining women's work to the household reduced the supply of female workers available for China's factories during early industrialization.

Taoist Evening Scripture

They found no effects for men in any of these countries, but found that hours employed had a negative effect on housework participation for employed American wives—and effects in the opposite direction for women in Sweden and Norway. The greatest paradox of collective agriculture, however, was that it was in one sense still household-based.
