Mixing cultural identities through transracial adoption; outcomes of the Indian Adoption Project (1958

ASAC promotes understanding of the experience, institution, and cultural representation of domestic and transnational adoption and related practices such as fostering, assisted reproduction, LGBTQ+ families, and innovative kinship formations. In the long-run, she feels like this is a far better outcome than a sense of belonging. In many cases, local missionaries complained about the living conditions of children in the reservation to the authorities who brought the youth welfare office into operation.
