A Burlington man first, last, and always, his power was employed solely to advance and protect the interests of that railroad. Like the first bridge it was made of wood trusses; unlike the first, each span had a curved top. Railroads built all of those lines eventually.

History of Railroads in Nebraska

The Burlington reached Billings, Mont. Extreme dry to extreme wet. Occasionally he would snatch one up and peruse it for a little while, but he soon threw it down with the suggestion that it was entirely too heavy for an ordinary mind to digest.

Photo courtesy of the Putnam Museum, Davenport, Iowa The second bridge viewed from the bluff in East Davenport, with the island and the bluffs on the Illinois side in the background. Army, Corps of Engineers, and Eunice Schlichting of the Putnam Museum provided valuable assistance in accessing images. Perhaps a confusion on Hanks's part with the Columbian Class Book.

Pacific Railroad Surveys

Ultimately, it is clear that Lincoln viewed Native Americans as simultaneously foreign and respectable.
