Caricaturing “traitors”: Communal reactions to indigenous collaboration in Japanese

Along with the rise of Korean nationalism came a rising sense of East Asian racial solidarity as defined by the term Pan-Asianism, which saw East Asia as united by the common threat of Western imperialist intrusion into the region. He also reveals a strong grasp of post-colonial theory and a literary skill that ensures that his writing rarely flags. I would like to thank the editors Godfre Leung and Sohl Lee, and other readers for their meticulous reading of my paper and their feedback.

Newspaper Publication in the Late Yi Dynasty, Korean Studies

Along with the rise of Korean nationalism came a rising sense of East Asian racial solidarity as defined by the term Pan-Asianism, which saw East Asia as united by the common threat of Western imperialist intrusion into the region. Just curious - what is it you're doing now? Nevertheless, by addressing their deteriorating lives as everyday issues rather than as a fundamental structural problem, the Candlelight protesters could not effectively intervene in the current socioeconomic system and failed to represent the needs of those who were suffering most from economic insecurity.

I wish the Candlelighters would march toward us. For instance, as a way of intervening in the pro-government news media, citizens wanted to represent their activism in their own terms. Its influence stretched throughout the entire nation.

Korea Between Empires, 1895

The ambivalent attitude of the Hwangsŏng sinmun toward Japan made it a target for the pro-Japanese organization, the Ilchinhoe on the one hand, and anti-Japanese nationalists on the other. The Independence Council, composed of enlightenment thinkers, printed the Independent in 1896 in pure Han'gul and thus, was widely read by the masses.

Sometimes, if those at home or at work found things were getting serious, they came out and joined the scene of the protests—even in the middle of the night. Begun in Taegu by Seo Sangdon, Kim Kwangjae, Park Haeryeong, and others in February 1907, the movement spread nationwide. The anti-communist and pro-United States South Korean government saw communism and North Korea as diametrically opposed to democracy and modernization.

As time went on, the ideas of enlightenment spread throughout society and state to become an important ideological base for the modern reform movement. After the victory over Poland and the following games with the United States and Portugal, etc. Schmid's choice of the year 1895 as a starting point for his study is significant in that this year saw the defeat of China in the Sino-Japanese War and China's official renunciation of its suzerain status over Korea in the Treaty of Shimonoseki 17 April 1895.
