The former is a hollow sphere covering the earth. Altogether, in reviewing Jewish Astronomy in the Middle Ages, one can not claim that Jews themselves made many contributions to the science; but by making the Greco-Arabic Astronomy accessible to Europe, they aided in keeping the interest in the subject alive, and prepared the way for the revival of the science in the sixteenth century. The earliest to treat of Astronomy in Hebrew on a systematic plan was , who wrote at Marseilles, about 1134.
