New Frontiers program

Understanding climate variability on the decadal timescale is important to decision-making.

Frontiers in Earth Science

ESWN membership by discipline, adapted from based on 2013 member survey.

Session Proposal: Frontiers of Atmospheric Science I (AGU Fall Meeting 2020)

Reports are peer reviewed and are approved by the National Academies of Sciences, Engineering, and Medicine. The processes that AGS-funded scientists pursue span a wide range of spatial scales, from solar coronal mass ejections and transmission of energy between the Sun and the Earth, to the molecular precursors of cloud condensation nuclei, and across a range of temporal scales, from paleoclimate studies of Earth's past to the rapid development of a tornado. As a result, our online discussions are open to a wide range of voices, which leads to diverse feedback and a greater likelihood of mentoring effectiveness.

Extending intellectual frontiers in atmospheric and geospace sciences

The objective of the course is to familiarize the students with important concepts and the latest results in environmental and atmospheric sciences and to create a common understanding of these issues among the participants coming from a variety of different disciplines.
