Importantly, those countries where teachers feel valued tend to perform better in PISA. This scenario for achieving a new social recognition of the value of knowledge and learning can be considered one such alternative, because it shifts the focus to meeting the needs and demands of higher education institutions, which must use it as the starting point to plan new organizational structures that provide broader access to socially-relevant knowledge and to develop training processes that target the creation of a renewed and expanded intellectual sector. The Rassias Method® is a very beneficial system for young people, for children, or even for us because we are learning so much here.
