Environmental Conflicts with Reimbursement for Citizen Suits

The Steel Company urged that in determining whether an award is appropriate, courts should consider: 1 whether the party assisted the judicial interpretation of the statute; 2 whether the issues involved were novel and important; and, 3 whether the case furthered understanding of the statute. This Article seeks to fill in several important gaps in the existing literature, particularly by providing more accurate, up-to-date estimates of the volume of litigation and how it varies regionally.

Citizen suit

In exchange for dropping its opposition, the NGO proposed an agreement that would require our client to take additional actions not required by the regulations or the environmental regulator. The analysis that follows uses a variety of statistical methods to assess the relative influence of local, executive, and judicial politics on case outcomes and the geographic distribution of citizen suits.
