I would be remiss if I did not mention music. Its distinctive jerkinhead roof is a rare survivor of early- to mid-eighteenth-century design. Many of you may have gotten to know him better, as I did, when he hosted the VAF conference in Salt Lake City, Utah, in 1987.

Pioneers' Houses in Virginia

The Greene Residence was built on Maryland's Eastern Shore as a year-around house for a New York advertising executive.

Vernacular Architecture Forum

William Hemsley became a leading planter on the Eastern Shore, growing in esteem and prestige in the community. Multiple artifacts from generations of Cloverfields inhabitants have been found.

Their efforts did save a new building that was under construction, the Thomas Perrin Smith house. As an expert builder of luxury homes, he is just as passionate about this particular project as he is about his personal craft, recognizing that there is a multitude of ways this restoration could become complicated. The planter then needed to either buy more virgin land nearby or to remove completely.

Just as early settlement houses were impermanent, so too these smaller, meaner wooden outbuildings were rudimentary, unadorned, and few examples have survived. His invited guest was Arthur Raper, a man now nearly forgotten, but who wrote eye-opening books in the 1930s about sharecroppers and about lynching.
