Paintings in tombs depict monkeys or baboons handing down figs from the sycamore trees to the gardener standing below. It is boiled in water, and the oil that swims on the surface is then skimmed off: but in Egypt, where it grows in a greater abundance, the oil is extracted without employing either fire or water for the purpose, the seed being first sprinkled with salt, and then subjected to pressure: eaten with food this oil is repulsive, but it is very useful for burning in lamps.

Dogwooddays

We also kept the veggies and tofu a little chunky so you could see bits of corn and asparagus peering through the translucent pocket. It is not certain whether wine of different years, vineyards or types were mixed.
