It is difficult to separate Hitchcock or his work from the patriarchal culture in which they existed.

'There's No Losing It': Disability and Voyeurism in Rear Window and Vertigo

We are about to rise but, just at that moment, the young couple across the way begins to kiss. But before we turn to particular places within these nations, let us dwell a little longer in the general realm while we consider the following scene. Jessie Stevens Jessie Royce Landis starred as the wealthy widow who flirted at the dinner table with John and tried to be a matchmaker for him and Frances.
