Remote Justices of the Peace (Magistrates Court) Program

Diversion programs—which divert a defendant or offender out of the criminal justice stream in order to address such factors prior to trial or sentencing—can also assist some Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people who come before the courts. In a period of leveraged national and international support for access to justice, our findings should stimulate debate and further research on the actually existing dynamics of lower state courts and prospects for reform.

Practice Directions

The results showed that the introduction of the video technology into the criminal courts reduced the levels of stress of child witnesses but did not increase the conviction rates. In both Gulu and Ntuzuma, in different ways, state imaginaries could blur liberal conceptions of the state with notions such as patriarchy, personalized rule, ethnic chauvinism, liberation politics, radical redistribution, and gerontocracy.
