Matthew Paris, Chronica maiora

But his criticisms as a whole are animated by a transparently honest fervour of moral indignation and by a patriotic jealousy for the honour of England.

Roger of Wendover's Flowers of History, 1: Comprising the History of England ...

As it is, the religious institutions with copies of the Charter are dotted across England from Tynemouth and York in the north to Glastonbury and Exeter in the west.

Matthew of Paris

Courtier and scholar, monk and man of the world, Matthew Paris was, both by training and position, exceptionally well qualified to undertake a history of his own time. Extracts from the Itinerarium Ricardi, Bohâdin, Ernoul, Roger of Howden, Richard of Devizes, Rigord, Ibn Alathîr, Li Livres Eracles, etc.

Magna Carta Project

In a London cartulary, the Charter of 1217 was followed by the sections added in 1225. The much greater number of 1225 copies, compared to those of 1217, is explained by the very different quality of the two versions.

Giles, 2 vols London: Bohn, 1849. Thus at Cerne abbey, its copy of the 1225 Charter was supplemented with passages omitted from the Charter of 1217. At present only one copy of the Charter is known in a secular cartulary, that belonging to the Northamptonshire knightly family of see , but, in part at least, this reflects the way ecclesiastical cartularies are far more likely to survive.
