The Borrowers Aloft: With the Short Tale Poor Stainless by Mary Norton

His meticulous craftsmanship reminded me of Keit THE SUNDAY FAMILY READ How sad that I have reached the end of The Borrowers series, but what a send off! A solid family circle, filled with love. The Clock family, Pod, Homily and Arietty, are kidnapped from their new home in Little Fordham and held captive in an attic by Mr and Mrs Platters, a married couple who own a rival model village.

I am glad I grew up in that era, especially when I look at my own grandchildren, and see apathy, sadness, a loss as to what to do, if they don't have their cell phones, or I-pads. It is interesting that what I assumed was superstitious or unfounded judgements of humans by Pod and Homily is now revealed as wisdom.

The Borrowers have found the perfect place to live - a complete model village! They must have been well before their time because so much of the tech and inventions folks used are still around today.

Homily who is courageous, even though she'd rather not be.

I'm all for ladies-first-etiquette and am much more forgiving than most when it comes to feminism, but goodness, I can't stand how he always makes it sound like he is the man in the house and Arrietty and Homily have to obey his every command.

His meticulous craftsmanship reminded me of Keith Stewart, the main character from Nevil Shute's 1960 bestseller, Trustee From the Toolroom.

The series was from the third and fourth books of the Borrowers series, The Borrowers Aloft and its predecessor. While I enjoyed the first two Borrowers' books and two Borrowers' movies back in my childhood, this is my first time reading this far into this classic children's fant After being uprooted to escape danger more than once, the little Clock family—Pod, Homily, and their teenaged daughter Arrietty—have been settling into a comfortable life of borrowing in a miniature village.

Pushed by Pod, Arriety rashly promises never to talk to tempting big people again, before remembering Miss M worries, cares, loves them. Also love the part in which Arietty declares that she's going to marry Spiller one day and she supposes she'll have to tell him that at some point.
