Han'guk

Hot dogs, sliced into coins. The hot-dog-garnished spaghetti Bolognese at the Gardena café Spoon House is probably the Japanese equivalent. Chunju Han-il Kwan is an oddly traditional restaurant, paneled with darkened wood and decorated with old cooking implements and veneered cross sections of logs.

Han Kook Kwan Korean Restaurant, BBQ & Grill, Manama ravintola

I rarely go out of the office for lunch but the only way to turn off the leaky faucet on my face was to stuff it with these dishes. A proper Korean meal is incomplete without a jjigae or its near-neighbor tang. Heavy beams run across the ceiling, which appears to be patinaed with decades of smoke.

Mustachioventures: Lunch Promos at Han Guk Kwan Korean Restaurant

You will even find decent takes on soontofu, the soft-tofu casserole that is usually only found in specialty restaurants, and the rice dish bibimbap. The standard bowl of rice is a concoction stained purple with beans.

Han Kook Kwan Korean Restaurant, BBQ & Grill, Manama ravintola

Budae jjigae, the legendary specialty of Chunju Han-il Kwan, is oddly tasty, but it is the furthest thing from refined. The twangs and pentatonic yowls of Korean classical music play at almost subliminally low volume. That familiar-looking square of curly noodles? There are sautéed cephalopods of every description, jjigae of half the creatures in the sea and a credible interpretation of gamjatang, the famous potato-and-pork-neck soup.

Kwak Hyun

A spitting cauldron of superheated liquid on a tabletop burner, ejecting droplets of orange goo and puffs of sulfurous steam, the budae jjigae at the Koreatown restaurant Chunju Han-il Kwan is alarming in aspect. Those lozenges of pink meat? A serving can feed two to three persons.
