CHAPTER 2

Spanish Civil War 1936-9

The Spanish Civil War 1936-9

The Spanish Civil War 1936-9. A struggle between the forces of the political left and the political right in Spain. The forces of the left were a disparate group led by the socialist Republican government against a group of right-wing military rebels. The Republicans had the support of the working-class majority in the cities and rural areas, like many civil conflicts, quickly acquired an international dimension that involved Britain, France, the USA and the Soviet Union. The Republicans and the right-wing forces led to the establishment of a military dictatorship in Spain under the leadership of General Francisco Franco, which lasted until his death in 1975.

The following key questions will be addressed in this chapter:

• To what extent was the Spanish Civil War caused by long-term social divisions within Spain?

• Key question: To what extent was the Spanish Civil War caused by international intervention?

• Key question: To what extent did the Spanish Civil War reflect the international situation in Europe?

• Key question: To what extent did the Spanish Civil War reflect the international situation in Germany and Italy?

• Key question: To what extent did the Spanish quickly come under arms, or Nationalist control, but the rising was not immediately successful? The military who failed to take the key cities of Madrid and Barcelona and most of Andalucia were defeated and forced to begin the long war on page 95.

Revolution had to be stamped out with the utmost ruthlessness. It has been said that the Spanish Civil War was in any event an experimental battle between Communist Russia and Nazi Germany. Knüppel, Eberhardt and Trautloft each destroyed a Potez 54.

Popular Front (Spain)

In its specific gravity in the country's economic life, in its political and cultural level, the Spanish proletariat stood on the first day of the revolution not below but above the Russian proletariat at the beginning of 1917.
