Prevalence

When tailoring activities to the needs and preferences of older people, staff should be aware of any learning disabilities, acquired cognitive impairments, communication and language barriers, and cultural differences. Health and social care professionals such as occupational therapists, psychiatrists, clinical psychologists, geriatricians, neurologists, GPs, nurse consultants, advanced nurse practitioners, social workers and palliative care teams give people with dementia and people involved in their care early and ongoing opportunities to discuss advance care planning.

Northern Ireland

Study participants are interviewed every two years, complete a health assessment every four years, and are followed-up for a period of at least 10 years. It has a separate Mental Health Review Board.

Dementia NI

Non-provision of adequate assessment, diagnosis and treatment services means that mental health problems can go untreated. Referrals would be made by primary care professionals or by staff in the generic intellectual disability services. Arson also seems to be more common Day, 1993.

Legislation

Quality measures Structure Service providers such as community mental health services, secondary care services, general practices, local authorities and community care providers ensure that professionals carry out a structured assessment to check for and address any clinical or environmental causes of distress before starting any treatment for distress for people with dementia. Technical Advice Note 12 — Design encourages a culture of inclusion in urban design.
