Slaves advertised in 18th

By the nineteenth century, tensions between African and American Indian Seminoles and the United States government led to a series of violent conflicts called the Seminole Wars 1814-19, 1835-42, 1855-58. As a military tactic, the Spanish offered freedom to slaves who escaped from their English rivals, particular from the nearby English colonies of Carolina and later Georgia. The title page is slightly 'browned' due to the age.

The letter contained the threat of death to anyone caught engaging in the slave trade in his country. Massachusetts abolished slavery in 1780; would it not be a masterly stroke of policy in Tennessee, and every other slave State, to abolish it in or before 1860? Many Kings also demanded weapons, muskets and gun powder in exchange for slaves, which only served to further support their wars with other Kings and therefore increase the number of slaves captured through wars. Free Africans were often taken into the Spanish militia, at sites such as the Gracia Real de Santa Teresa de Mosé fort north of St.
