Hendrik Werkman (1882)

It was in the 1920s that he began making a name for himself in creative uses of typography.

Semple Press: 2013

I never thought of type faces as apart of art until I began looking at it through the perspective of this class. In 1908 he started a printing business in Groningen at the Peperstraat 5.

Using speech marks, or commas, or other pieces of actual type in the press mark seems to fit with this ethos, so last weekend I started messing with the punctuation. The fact is that this ended the life of a gifted and quirky artist who continued to innovate, who did not care about existing rules, but always went his own way. If I'd thought about it at all I would have assumed that the pages were from a Radio Times or a Reader's Digest.

It could be the food industry, but could equally apply to the financial industry and banks and. Don't bother to buy second hand type in smaller sizes unless it's very unusual, or you know the previous owner treated it properly Although I suspect this whole episode reads like a nightmare, it's actually been an enjoyable experience.

Hendrik Werkman in Museum Belvédère

The textured background is made up of two layers of ink. Was it because he was doing illegal printing or was a danger from making art prohibited by Nazis? After 1929 he also began writing rhythmic sound poems. But where does this leave those who are printing for profit? In 1919 he joined De Ploeg, for which he took care of the printing - posters, invitations and catalogs.
