Supporting Family Caregivers in Providing Care

As good as it gets? The effects of caregiving are not all negative.

Aging and Family Life: A Decade Review

The health and medical care domain of the caregiving role is increasingly complex. Low personal and household incomes and limited financial resources can result in increased caregiver risk for negative outcomes, particularly if there are substantial out-of-pocket costs for care recipient needs. Most cross-sectional studies of marital satisfaction have suggested a U-shaped curve with satisfaction high during the early and late stages of marriage and low during the middle stage.

Caregiving for Family and Friends â€” A Public Health Issue

Convincing them otherwise is fruitless and may make them more upset. Tradition of Care for the Elderly Thrives in Black Families New York Times March 15, 1998 Tradition of Care for the Elderly Thrives in Black Families DURHAM, N.

Why should older people rely on their families for care?

Given the essential role they play, involving family caregivers as key partners in health care and LTSS settings is vitally important, as discussed further in Providing Emotional and Social Support. When older adults first need caregiving because of increasing frailty or onset of a debilitating disease, they need emotional and social supports that are different from the usual exchanges among family members.
