1. Choosing a Research Problem

But they can also find inspiration by picking up a copy of almost any professional journal and reading the titles and abstracts. Almost all of these problems exist in one form or another in utilization of the products of biological and physical sciences, too.

Generating Good Research Questions

Generating Empirically Testable Research Questions Once you have a research idea, you need to use it to generate one or more empirically testable research questions, that is, questions expressed in terms of a single variable or relationship between variables. Analogous power dynamics may exist in biomedical research, particularly in clinical research involving sick and desperate individuals and healthcare providers who mediate their access to needed resources.

Social Research Methods

Attitudes and cultural norms were vastly different then than they are now. When you test the theory, your results either prove or disprove your hypothesis. Pick three studies, and rate each one in terms of how feasible it would be for you to replicate it with the resources available to you right now.

Generating Good Research Questions

But what if you find that it has been studied scientifically? Knowledge and Power in the Research Process The regulations and guidelines that structure the ethical review of research in North America—the Belmont Report 7 and the Common Rule 8 in the United States and the Tri-Council Policy Statement TCPS 9 in Canada—provide direction for researchers and for the entities charged with oversight of research performed in academic institutions. Ethnographies involve objective observation of an entire community.

Ethical Review of Interpretive Research: Problems and Solutions

Social scientists had another try during the early years of the New Deal when economists especially, but sociologists and political scientists too, were invited into government and other institutions to develop programs, plans, and social devices for dealing with the Great Depression. A hypothesis is derived from a theoretical proposition.
