On 1 September 1944, after the , Bardèche was detained for the articles he had written in Je suis partout. At home, the Narrator's grandmother has worsened, and while walking with him she suffers a stroke.

The Thrill of Proust's Handwriting

The Narrator is living with Albertine in his family's apartment, to Françoise's distrust and his absent mother's chagrin.

Maurice Bardèche

This is the first time that many of these materials have been exhibited outside the Bibliothèque Nationale de France, which owns most of them thanks to De Gaulle, of all people, who considered them a national treasure and rescued them from private sale , and being in their presence feels significant, and not just for that reason. The transmutation of the experience of a scene in one of the family's usual walks into a short descriptive passage is described and the sample passage given. The narrator presents this passage as an early sample of his own writing, in which he has only had to alter a few words.
