Recommended minimum salary for trainee solicitors and SQE candidates

The JLD supports this policy on behalf of its members, who are most affected by it and would see the most positive effects of a minimum salary that sits at a higher rate to the alternative, which is the minimum wage. No, there is no regulatory requirement to pay this recommended minimum salary, and there will be no consequences for not doing so.

Firm to pay of trainee sacking

This can allow you to use your legal skills and knowledge and to build your experience to strengthen future applications. You will be trusted to undertake work that is central to a matter, encouraged to think about the management of a case and given opportunities for client interaction. Attending a variety of trustee meetings whilst in the charities team was really interesting as it gave me a great insight into how charities of all shapes and sizes run their affairs and what issues they are most concerned about.

Firm to pay of trainee sacking

Find a Solicitor takes data held by the SRA, which we adapt and add additional information to, and present through an easy-to-use search. New trainee solicitors still have to have undertaken the academic stage of training law degree or CPE as well as the vocational stage typically the LPC.

Find a Solicitor

External assessors come into the firm each year to confirm that we are keeping up to the mark. Please for information about getting advice from a solicitor.

SRA

The prospect of having to answer questions on the spot without being able to run my answers past my supervisor was daunting, but as the meeting progressed, my confidence grew as did my ability to suggest and advise — I would even go so far as saying I enjoyed it! It was agreed that it would not be cost-effective to the client for my supervisor to attend this meeting and therefore I was to go on my own.

What is it like to be an employment trainee solicitor?

Of course this can depend on the department and deadlines but the firm has a really friendly atmosphere and promotes a good work life balance. Or you can use pro search to search for members of a specific accreditation scheme.
