Past and Present Perceptions Towards Disability: A Historical Perspective

The United States argued that to decide whether government action prevents participation in religious conduct requires a holistic analysis that focuses on whether a religious institution has a reasonable expectation of approval, the existence of feasible alternatives for religious exercise and whether pursuing alternatives would cause the religious institution substantial delay, uncertainty, and expense. This report, based on a national survey of current state laws, flags common areas where states need to take aggressive action to come into full compliance with federal law, including the amendments to the federal McKinneyVento Homeless Assistance Act that went into effect on October 1, 2016.

Housing

The peak institutionalization for a different population, those with developmental disabilities, occurred in 1967, with nearly 200,000 residents. In combination with Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act, FHA and ADA redress discrimination in housing and in community development programs.
