John Cruickshank, Eighteenth Century French Novel. Techniques of Vivienne Mylne

The third installment appeared in 1957, published under the auspices of Librairie Droz. She discusses, firstly, the theories and aims which conditioned the genre, such as the allegation of a moral purpose and the pretence that the novel is a true story, an attitude which contributed to the widespread popularity of memoir-novels and the epistolary form. Critical editions by Droz meet the highest scholarly expectations, defining their texts for a generation, while the publisher applies rigorous intellectual and editing standards to its monographs and series.

Secondly, on the level of technique and structure, the author studies methods of characterisation and plot-construction, effects of style and emotional tone, and descriptive devices such as the use of factual details to increase verisimilitude.
