For the first time in American history, the news from the front lines was brought straight into the living room. Naked Violence His violence, however, remained, and without those personal and social justifications, that violence transformed from civilizing and courageous to chaotic and threatening. Since the vast majority of Vietnam coverage was nothing more than an anchorman reading a description of in-country fighting, the networks' tendency to follow these descriptions with footage of violence from protests at home gave the impression that the demonstration footage illustrated the Vietnam stories.
