Jack Nicholson's Daughter Grew Up To Be Gorgeous

Over-research and then whittle the material down seems to be the right approach. The tradition started in the 1950s, with Peggy Dow being recognized as the first Miss Golden Globe in 1951. Nicholson plays the role of a journalist, David Locke, who during an assignment in North Africa decides to quit being a journalist and simply disappear by taking on a new hidden identity.

McGilligan's insights provide a lot of entertainment, but only as they coincide with Jack Nicholson's Renaissance period of the 1970s.

Jack Nicholson

His agent turned down a starring role in when the film's producer and director, , refused to pay what Nicholson's agent wanted. The Great Movies, Volume 1, Broadway Books 2002 p. Critic and screenwriter provides an overview of Nicholson's role: The Passenger is an unidealized portrait of a drained man whose one remaining stimulus is to push his luck.
