The Electors, for the greater part, were against England, and the Austrian alliance appeared not to be of that advantage to King Charles that it might have been earlier.

Historical Collections: Military action in 1643

He drew over Ferdinand to his party, though that monarch at first made no declaration of his intentions. Soon after the opening of the Civil War, in 1642, the King was at Shrewsbury, and the entries are fairly numerous for that year. If I acknowledge the Doctrine of the Church of England in general, that includes all.
