Coroner's Court Diary

Over time, the sought increasing help from the City's commoners and this was eventually recognised with commoners being represented by the Court of Common Council, known by that name since at least as far back as 1376. The flames were clearly seen at Windsor twenty-four miles from London , and at Roydon Mount, near Epping eighteen miles.

These models also had a performative role, as a testimony and proxy for proposed buildings and the political authorities responsible for procurement. After the banquet she entered the Bourse on the south side, viewed every part; especially she caused the building, by herald's trumpet, to be proclaimed 'the Royal Exchange,' so to be called from henceforth, and not otherwise. It so happens the entry is most usually at Temple Bar.

1847 J.B. Bunning and the Coal Exchange Model

He says, in a letter to the Duke of Northumberland, that he hoped in one year to save England £20,000.

1847 J.B. Bunning and the Coal Exchange Model

With a narrative of the proceedings of the Court of Common-Council: and the vote of the House of Parliament, and their answer thereupon. The piazzas were supported by marble pillars, and above were 100 small shops. City of London: Secrets of the Square Mile.
