Gerald Durrell: The Authorised Biography

Remarkably, given the intense, almost profligate lyricism with which he sometimes wrote, Durrell claimed to consider himself no more than "a hack journalist. Of course, not all 37 books were autobiographical, but a good many were and the reader who has read even just one or two of Durrell's books will get a sense of deja-vu.

But he got overexcited, and what exactly happened I don't know, but in the end he had a sort of brainstorm, and he died rather quickly.

Gerald Durrell: The Authorized Biography

One of the obstacles Botting had too overcome was the great familiarity of the various events in Durrell's life that Durrell himself recorded in his 37 books. When Gerald was older his mother told him something about the circumstances of his entry into the world.
