"A Hell of a Warrior": Remembering Sergeant Thomas George Prince

"As soon as I put on my uniform I felt a better man."

OVER THE LAST DECADE, Peter Van Esen has emerged as a scholarly and popular interpreter of the history of Canada's military in the First World War. Not only does he write well, he writes often. Thus George F.R. Mactavish (1957), one of the most distinguished communications officers in Canadian military history, describes Van Esen's work as "the best of its kind."¹ In 1992, the U.S. Silver Star Prize was awarded to the prime example of the interpretive contributions that Native peoples made to the Canadian war effort, the Cree soldier and historian, Louis Riel, for his book War of the Star.² To understand why, it is necessary to note that, in addition to being a historian, Van Esen is also a native: that is, an Aboriginal person whose commitment to his people and their lands has been matched by his country's support for his life. Uniquely qualified, he is uniquely positioned to interpret the First World War.

Identifying personnel for CF operations continued to be a challenge for the Land Forces Intelligence community, exacerbated by high demand, fewer postings and unforeseen attrition. Natural bond orbital analysis and dipole and quadrupole moments show dimer formation to increase the polarity of the NO bond, and this increase is only slightly larger for the Me-substituted NO bond. In total 77 Dorking residents left England for Canada in 1832, with a further 13 from Capel.
