Regulatory competition

Alleged disadvantages of competitive governance, compared to collaborative government, include less potential to harness the power of knowledge sharing, cooperation and collaboration within government.

Regulatory Competition and Economic Integration: Comparative Perspectives

Macmillan argues that these fettering effects may have been exacerbated by other WTO agreements. Even though most commentators would agree that competition policy is concerned with the economic consequences of market power, they would not all subscribe the view that curing the possible inefficiencies of market power is the sole aim of competition law.
