Draper, who appears never to have mentioned it to his closest colleagues. Contains rich geographic material and interactive maps.

Lewis and Clark Books and Resources

The Peabody Museum presents this website that explores Native American objects collected by the Corps of Discovery and sent back to President Jefferson. This presentation focuses on the various documents from maps to newspapers to cultural artifact that help to describe the region of North America that stretched from as far east as Alabama into what is now the state of Montana.

Assigning the Corps Members Some members of the Corps played a larger role in the expedition than did others, so you might want to assign some students more than one person to research and introduce. For other documents related to the expedition, see AJ-090, AJ-140, AJ-146, AJ-147, and AJ-160. In the decades after Lewis and Clark the company of western explorers expanded to include fur traders, missionaries, and government topographers, culminating in the 1850s with the Army's Corps of Topographical Engineers surveying the southwestern and northwestern boundaries of the United States as well the potential routes for a transcontinental railroad.

President Thomas Jefferson's instructions to Meriwether Lewis, June 20, 1803
