The four colonies that would become South Africa were represented, along with a delegation from

The Union of South Africa 1910

The Monarch was represented in South Africa by a , while effective power was exercised by the Executive Council, headed by the. The model was also correctly seen as unsuitable for the disparate entities of , with their wildly different sizes, economies and political systems. Discussions regarding the magisterial structure for the area's political integration into the Cape dragged on until, from 1876, it was blocked by Britain.

Union of South Africa

Among the first indications of a brewing rebellion was the killing of a farmer, Henry Smith, on 17 January 1906 by one of his workers. Its full sovereignty was confirmed with the and the.

By this, I mean that the British realised that for racial domination to be viable, they would need to forge an alliance with the Boers — hence the generous terms of the Treaty of Vereeniging. The features of the Union were carried over with very little change to the newly formed Republic.

The unification of South Africa, 1902

The attempt was doomed to fail, despite the fact that every politically conscious black person was against the terms and not the principal of the Union.
