Nihon ni okeru nōminsō no bunkai / Ōuchi Tsutomu cho

What these are, or how they are determined, I don't know.

KATA / BUNKAI — National Shorei

Personally, I love using ura bunkai with higher ranked students, since it gives me a good reason to apply exotic pressure points, brutal joint locks, sweet takedowns and nasty tricks that I might not usually teach as grading requirements. I do think with bunkai, you probably need to be aware what lots of the combinations are, pick favourites and drill them constantly to ever be able to apply them as self defence. Catalogue Persistent Identifier APA Citation Ōuchi, Tsutomu.

KATA / BUNKAI — National Shorei

I find it difficult to imagine that anybody could imagine a fight unfolding like this. Others choose other techniques and combinations. Referring back to the Alphabet analogy from the other thread.

Rōdō shijō no tenkai to nōminsō bunkai / Yoshida Kanʾichi hen

The point in raising all of this is that the common explanation of the motion has, in my view, many problems both historically and practically.
